Your Guide To SURVIVING The Holidays

Impeachment

Democrats have been talking about impeaching President Trump since before he won the 2016 election. Politico had an article in April of 2016, just over 6 months before the election, discussing the possibility of then-candidate Donald Trump being impeached if he happened to beat Hillary Clinton. The day after the election, Google saw a 4850% increase of searches on “how to impeach a president.” Less than one week after candidate Trump won the 2016 election, the media started promoting the idea with over 37 news headlines discussing impeachment.

The media and the Democrats were actively promoting the impeachment of President Trump before any of the events that they are now citing as his impeachable offense occurred. Nancy Pelosi previously stated that impeaching a president must have bipartisan support, but has now flip-flopped. To this day, when asked which articles of impeachment Democrats will use to impeach President Trump, they do not have an answer.

This impeachment attempt is merely an attempt to help the eventual Democratic presidential nominee. Rep. Al Green admitted this by saying, "I'm concerned if we don't impeach this president, he will get re-elected."
